Serious vows are made to a light fixture. The restless dalliances are for paint, wallpaper, the hot little accessories that just wanna have fun. When it's real the feeling is electric. Those typical gilt swoons over sparkle and drama are now felt for the Luster chandelier by Zac Ridgely. Handcrafted of polished gold aluminum, it emanates a moody, tangled sophistication—matte black, unstructured and sexy—that is gorgeously at the center of industrialist amore. The Toronto-based designer's inspiration was "a moment of captured fire," an open flame perpetually burning (in our hearts). To inquire, 416 294 4690 ridgelystudioworks.com

Perhaps it began with the drawbridge, that cross-pollination of grandeur and practicality which suggests that entrée into a private residence deserves more pomp than a knob. Those in agreement surrender the functional twists and turns to the superb hardware of French studio Série Rare while the cavalcade waits out front. Designer Daniel Podva leaves just enough to chance, his stunning collection hand made of bronze de Paris with tantalizing contours and imperfect flashes. Thinking of fine contradictions, light and dark, near and far, and that exotic aura of brut et raffiné, rough and tender. To inquire, 6, rue de l'Odéon Paris, France +33 1 55 42 9210 serierare.com

Your best friend announces plans to purchase a weekend home—a picturesque retreat a mere two hours outside the city with a lush yard to play croquet and a patio for displaying an unloved telescope. It is Eden blissfully removed from hipsters. Graciously you offer companionship during shopping excursions, living vicariously through fabric memos and backsplash deliberations. Only when discovering the Sylvia sofa from the new collection by chic Los Angeles designer Reagan Hayes do pangs of jealousy intensify. This glamorous creature with the graceful silhouette and elegant proportions is petite enough for your foyer and beckons for the serenity of your space. "Good friends celebrate the happiness of others," your conscience chides. But you've never been particularly religious. To purchase, 888 380 8642 reaganhayes.com
